Interdisciplinary Applications

Introduction

Military psychology was one of the earliest applications of psychological research, and PsycINFO offers a rich source of bibliographic information. Researchers interested in combat stress, training for battle, public opinion about war, career development, and decision making as applied to the military will be able to locate essential research materials.

Published by the American Psychological Association, the bibliographic database PsycINFO is a widely used source of information for psychologists. With more than 2 million abstracts from more than 2,000 journals published worldwide, PsycINFO offers practical benefits for health professionals working in military settings, military psychologists, or researchers specializing in veterans' issues.
